U.S. Is Investigating Why Ex-Envoy Had Secret Files

By Laurence Stern and John Goshko

WASHINGTON, Sept. 13 (WP) — The Justice Department is investigating the possession of voluminous files of top-secret intelligence documents the FBI recovered in January from the bome and auto-mobile of the former U.S. ambassador to South Vietnam, Graham

The Justice Department has been considering whether to prosecute Mr. Martin under a seldom-used statute dealing with the misuse of classified documents. Phone-Bugging Scandal

Charged by Spain Weekly By James M. Markham

MADRID, Sept. 13 (NYT) — A simmering scandal involving alleged free-lance telephone bugging by rightist policemen boiled over today when Spain's highest-circula-tion magazine published excerpts of what it said were intercepted telephone conversations of politi-cians and other public figures.

"We have the tapes," boasted the cover of Interviu, a weekly that spelegedly involving such figures as the treasury minister and the chief of Spain's industrial federation

Intervity said that a two-hourlong tape had been anonymously delivered to its offices in a yellow envelope. It suggested strongly that it must have been the work of the secret police. "Some listen for a few; we tell the story for everyone, said the magazine, asserting that it had deleted anything that might be embarrassing to the persons overbeard. Interior Mininster Rodolfo Martin Villa, who is already investigating accounts that he was spied on by his own police force, issued a stero note ordering legal action against Interviu for insulting the poice. An Interior Ministry note said that the cooversations repro-duced in the magazine involved persons speaking from radio-tele-phones in cars which are easy to intercept by anyooc equipped with a commercial receiver.

'If They Let Us'

But, io a telephooe cooversation, Autonio Aiverez-Solis, the magazine's iconoclastic editor, said that some of the conversations clearly were conducted over ordinary telephones. "We are going to publish them next week, if they let us." said Mr. Alverez-Solis. "It will be a fat issue. Anyway, we cannot insult the police, because if the police are doing this they must have orders."

Telephone bugging has become something of a political leitmotiv in Spain, connecting the democratic present with the Franco past. The police is one of the last institutions to be affected by Spain's gradual political reform, and bugging appears to have continued for some time. A year ago, a Madrid daily published a transcript of a conversation of Jose Maria Areilza, a former foreign minister. There have been persistent allegations of bugging of the offices of political

Japan Asked Hitler to Make Peace With Russia

WASHINGTON, Sept. 13 (WP) — Japan tried repeatedly in 1942 and 1943 to get Germany to make peace with the Soviet Unioo so the Germans could turn all their war might on the United States and Great Britain. The Japanese made their strongest attempts to move the Germans into separate peace talks with the Russians in 1943, a year after Germany bad lost the Battle of Stalingrad and was pulling back along the entire Eastern Front. But as early as July 29, 1943, Hitler told the Japanese ambassador to Germany he would conunue to make war against Russia because Germany needed the wheat fields of the Ukraine to feed its army and because Hitler was convinced he could beat the Russians. Details of the Japanese attempts to mediate a separate peace between Germany and the Soviet Union are in 30,000 pages of messages from Japanese diplomats around the world. The Japanese codes were broken by the Signal Security Service in the fall of 1940. The decoded messages have just been turned over to the National Archives.

Intent Repeated 1

The papers also show that Hiller repeated his intent twice more, once in August, 1943, and again in October, telling Japanese Ambassador Hiroshi Oshima that the German Army would wear down the Russians and then conduct a counteroffensive that would win the war in the East.

"When I talked with Hitler." Oshima said after his meeting in October, "he said that if a man has five quarts of blood and it's all spilled, death ensues immediately, and that if ooe and a half or two quarts are spilled, be must become gradually weaker. That is the strategy which Germany has adopted toward Russia."

Again and again, Hitler explained to Oshima that the Germans oeeded Ukrainian wheat to fight the Soviet Union in the East and the United States and Britain in the West.

Just before he met Hitler for the third time in 1943. Oshima told Tokyo that Germany might be interested in a separate Russian treaty. Oshima said that Finland. Germany's ally on the Russian Front, was "worried about constant rumors of a separate peace" and that German Foreign Minister Joachim von Ribbentrop listened to Oshima's feelers about a separate treaty "without jumpiog down

"Von Ribbentrop confessed that the question of peace with the Russians was a serious one." Oshima cabled to Tokyo on Oct. 7, "and that he was going to think about it. For the first time, I got the impression that German officials may be working behind closed doors toward a peace with Russia." The next day, Von Ribbentrop pulled the rug out from under such talk when he told Oshima, gree his opinion that this war must, and can, be decided by force."

A day later, Hitler himself explained to Oshima (Confloued on Page Z. Col. 7)

WASHINGTON, Sept. 13 (WP) — Japan's World War II ambassador to Germany unwittingly supplied the Allies with detailed plans of German fortifications along the coast of France more than six months before the invasion of Normandy.

After a two-week tour of German coastal defenses in Normandy and Brittany, Japanese Ambassa-dor Hiroshi Oshima radioed a 30-page message to Tokyo describing his trip. His briefings by the German high command gave their plans for defending the coast and details of the German fortifications and weapons along the coast.

Oshima's message and a follow-up cable in even greater detail from his military side were decoded by the United States and are included in the thousands of pages of broken Japanese cables just turned over to the National Archives by the National Security Agency.

At about the same time the United States was reading descriptions of Germany's coastal derfenses, it was also learning from many of the same cables about the supersecret German V-2 rocket weapon. Once again, messages from Oshima to Tokyo supplied some of the first clues.

"Germany's retaliation against England will come by rocket," Oshima told Tokyo in September, 1943. Oshima then went on to place the weapons at Peenemunde and Friedrichshafen, the first time the Allies had any idea of where to look for

Oshima then advised Tokyo: "Please keep the names of these places utterly, absolutely secret

Far more important than these numbers were Oshima's descriptions of the fortifications, including the exact number of Tiger and Pantber tanks in reserve behind them, an invaluable piece of information for the Allies. Oshima said the keystone of the Germans' de-

6 Typhoid Cases Confirmed by British Officials

LONDON, Sept. 13 (AP) — Six confirmed cases of typhoid fever were reported in Britain yesterday. Health authorities said that three of the victims became ill after a cruise on a Soviet liner. Health officials said that they were trying to trace 500 persons who went on cruises aboard the Soviet liner Litva last month. They said there was no firm evi-

The typhoid alert began last weekend when three Britons came down with the disease two weeks after returning from a cruise on the Litva. Medical ebecks are planned on the liner and its crew when it docks at Tilbury, east of London on Saturday.

Castro Starting Drive for Support in U.S.

By David Binder

WASHINGTON, Sept. 13 (NYT)

- Cuban President Fidel Castro has begun a strenuous campaign of wooing U.S. public opinion. State Department officials ooted last week, and he may be thioking of softening attitudes of the Carter administration hy reducing Cuba's military presence in Africa.

There have been indications that the Castro government has slightly reduced the oumber of Cuban troops in Ethiopia and Angola in recent weeks, the officials said, although the total oumber of Cubans io Africa is very high.

The administration estimates that there are 17,000 Cubao troops in Ethiopia, most of them in the Ogadeo region cootested by neigh-boring Somalia, and 19,000 in Aogola, where they have been helping the Luanda government fight large guerrilla forces in the south. In addition, intelligence estimates hold that Cuba retains about 4,000 civilian technicians in Africa, virtually all of whom may be considered military reservists.

Speaking earlier last week to a group of 11 Cuban-American journalists visiting Havana, Mr. Castro said that he has had the Cuban expeditionary forces very much on his mind. He said they would be withdrawn only when they were no longer occded, and in consultation with the host African governments.

More Contacts Sought The visit of the Cuhan-Americans, mostly from Miami and New York, was described by Mr. Castro as a "haby" that occded protection if it was 10 grow into a vehicle of wider exchanges, and he added that he wanted to continue discourse with Cuban communities in foreign conotries to promote family reunifications and visits. There are about 750,000 Cuban exiles in the United States, almost one-tenth of the population of Cuba 20 years ago.

At the same time, Mr. Castro acknowledged that his government would shortly release 48 political prisoners to the United States out of a total of 3,000 remaining in

Mr. Castro said that all together, 15,000 Cubans had been imprisoned for counterrevolutionary crimes after he took power oearly 20 years ago and that 400 of these had been ideotified as especially dangerous criminals meriting extra when it was hit in the rear by a van driven by Robert Duggar, 21, of Goshen, killing Judy Ulrieh, 18, of Osceola, her 16-year-old sister, punishment.

The reasons for these steps, and the iovitation to the exiles, he said, were that his revolution had become irreversible, hostilities had diminished and "a Cuhan detente has taken place."

The State Department spokesman, Hoddiog Carter 3d, welcomed the announcement of the prisoner releases, just as he had ear-lier welcomed the annouocement from Havana that a number of Cuban-American duo-nationals would shortly he allowed to leave Cuba for the United States. But Mr. Carter also remarked that the framework for improving Cuhan-U.S. relations remained cootingent on withdrawal of Cuban troops from Africa. Some State Department Cuba specialists believe that Mr. Castro may have begun to reassess his atti-tude toward the Carter administratioo mainly in the light of Cuba's economic problems, which are sharpened by a continuing U.S. embargo oo trade.

Continuing low prices for sugar on the international market have forced Havana to adopt new aust-erity measures, and Cuha still re-quires heavy subsidies from the Soviet Unioo - estimated to cost $3 million a day. would cause a sharp decline in oil output by 1985.

The Swedish report, "Soviet Preparations for Major Boost of Oil Exports" said that, in fact, the Russians would triple their oil exports to the west by 1985, in comparison with last year, reaching a volume of 3.7 million barrels daily.

It said that the bulk of the oil would go to Western Europe and viet Union's two largest oil fields that the Russians could cootrol when it said that the largest field one-fourth of the 1985 market for was becoming flooded and that this crude oil and refined products, compared with a 9.7-percent share

The report dealt in detail with the leading Soviet oil field, Samotlor, which provided one-fourth of the nation's output last year.
The CIA said that water incursion cut production by 47 percent in 1975 and that by 1985 the Soviet Union would have to import oil. The CIA has been mistakenly using a completely wrong figure, confusing Samotlor with the Romashkino oil field," the report

"Samotlor is geared to exhaust only one-third of its reserves by 1981, and to speak of this giant field just as it was a sick, old veteran, soon ready for a funeral is pure nonsense," said Metja Jermol, one of the report's authors.

The report, based on a two-year study, said that the Soviet Union was systematically underproducing their wells by up to 30 percent.

It said that the Russians could earn $20 billion in hard currency in 1985 oo oil exports compared to $6.4 billion last year. The report also said that the Russians were purposely cutting back oil exports to their East European allies and instead aiding the expansion of do-mestic energy production.

The Swedish report added that the Russians were building export refineries in their border regions. The refineries were believed to have been for the domestic market, but the authors said that they have found explicit Soviet policy state-ments that the refineries were intended for the export market.

Soviet Dissident Physicist Granted 1-Year Exit Visa

MOSCOW, Sept. 13 (UPI) -Dissident Soviet physicist Serger Polikanov said today that he and his family have been granted oneyear exit visas to visit Copenhagen. Mr. Polikanov, 51, told Western reporters that he was summoned to the Moscow visa office last week and told he could leave with his wife, Alexandra, and his 17-yearold daughter, Ekaterina. Dissident sources said it was unlikely that Mr. Polikanov, a member for 22 years of the Soviet Communist Party and a corresponding member of the Soviet Academy of Sciences, will be allowed to return to the Soviet Union.

The sources said the departure of such a distinguished spokesman will deal a hlow to the dissident community.

A privileged scientist with his own laboratory at the ouclear research facility in Dubna, 50 miles north of Moscow, Mr. Polikanov defected to the dissident camp from established Soviet society last November when the authorities refused to allow his family to accompany him on an approved year-long research trip to Geneva. Mr. Polikanov said that he refused to live under these conditions. He is a Lenio Prize winner and holder of the Order of Lenin. On July 15, the day after a Mos-cow court sentenced dissident Ana-toli Shcharansky to 13 years in prison on spying charges, Mr. Polika-oov announced that he was joining an unofficial group set up to moni-tor Soviet observance of the human rights provisions of the 1975 Helsinki accords.

He said then that he wanted to carry on the work of the groups founder, Yuri Orlov, who was sen-tenced the previous month to 12 years in prison.

The Soviet authorities have been cracking down on dissidents in the past 18 months, and the Moscow community of dissenters has few prominent activists left. Mr. Polikanov is oot the first dis-

He says the public wants a ci-vilian president and is offering himself as a compromise alternative in the event, however remote, of a crisis brought on hy a deadlock be-tween the military candidates.

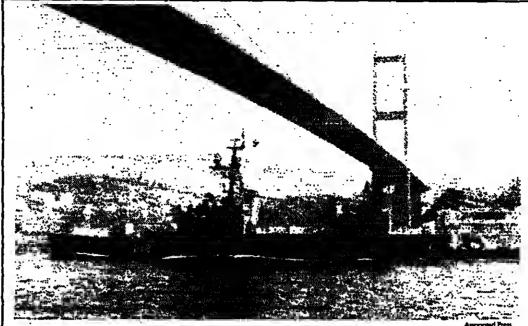

In their numerous appearances, the two generals have made it clear that they disagree on most major political and economic questions. Gen. Figueiredo, handpicked by current President Ernesto Geisel. has committed himself to the policy of "slow and gradual redemocratization" promised by Gen. Geisel hut has also warned that the "revolution," as the regime here calls itself, will continue for as long

Gen. Bentes Monteiro, on the other hand, has pledged an imme-diate resortation of democracy and a return to civilian rule within three years, arguing that it is time for the military to head "back to the barracks."

Confident of victory, Gen. Figueiredo and his advisers are now attempting to soft-pedal the issues and concentrating on bringing out the candidate's personality in best Madison Avenue style. Unlike Brazil's four previous military presidents, who arrived in office as complete strangers to the public, Gen. Figueiredo, 60. has gone out of his way to talk to the press and meet "the man in the street" in carefully staged encounters.

Under the tutelage of media specialists from the nation's largest advertising agency, Gen. Figueiredo has sought to project the image of a gruff and straight-talking man of the people. Almost nightly, televi-sion newscasts show him in folksy scenes: inviting workers to have drinks, kissing a "Miss Brazil" beauty contest winner, visiting his childhood home or tying the shoes of a kindergarten student.

Paris Takes 1,000 Indochinese a Month

By Andreas Freund

PARIS, Sept. 13 (NYT) — A total of 50,000 refugees from Vietnam, Cambodia and Laos bave been given asylum in France since the end of the Vietnam War, according to the latest statistics.

In the past three years, an average of 1,000 such refugees have been admitted to this country every month. France is second among the host countries concerned, after the United States, which has taken about 150,000 at a monthly rate of rate of unemployment. But they usually must accept jobs of a lower grade than they are qualified for in their own countries.

Among the first wave of refugees in 1975-76, there was apparently a majority of intellectuals and bourgeois. Now the refugees are more often employees, low-level civil servants or peasants. The former cateory seems to have done better in its integration. A favored activity is opening a restaurant. Vietnamese restaurants in the Paris area number about 1,000, and overall in France 2.500.

An unusual resettling operation was recently completed in one of France's last colonies, the sparsely populated jungle country of French Guyana in Latin America.

There, 500 Meo tribesmen from Laos, and two French Roman Catholic missionaries, have been installed in the village of Cacao, 50 miles from Cayenne, the Guyana capital. They will farm and hant in climate similar to the one of their Laotian homeland,

But this and other projects are still far from solving the plight of the refugee population in the camps of Thailand which, according to Jean-Jacques Beucler, president of the national committee of the Indochina aid organizations here, is still more than 125,000.

Mr. Beucler said here Monday that, as a result of the recent tension between Vietnam and China, the rate of refugees crossing into Thailand had grown to 5,000 to 6,000 a month.

News Analysis

France's Barre Pursues Industrial Renaissance

By Paul Lewis

French are returning from their summer vacations this month to their first real taste of the joys of serving as guinea pigs in one of Europe's most significant and closely watched economic-political

For Raymond Barre, France's ehullient and dogmatic prime min-ister, it is a moment of truth.

Mr. Barre took advantage of the smashing defeat he inflicted on his Socialist and Communist oppo-nents in the March parliamentary elections to launch a controversial package of conservative economic reforms intended to prepare France for the arduous times he sees ahead in the 1980s.

Inflation is to be mastered by rigid economies in public spending and by wage controls, and company profits rebuilt by phasing out France's 30-year tradition of price controls, while inefficient indus-tries will be weaned of their reliance on paternalistic government handouts and forced to stand on their own feet - or go under.

By liberating the French economy from government interference, weeding out inefficient industries and hringing down inflation, Mr. Barre confidently believes that he can sow the seeds of an industrial renaissance that will keep the country prosperous in the new world of expensive energy and increasing competition from the industrialized developing countries.

But before the good news, comes the bad. Whatever long-term bene-fits Mr. Barre's new economic liberalism may promise France, its immediate impact is proving pain-ful for everyone — and politically testing for the prime minister and Largely as a result of Mr. Barre's reforms, France's returning vaca-tioners are coming home to face: Higher unemployment. From its current record level of 1.2 million, many economists see unemployment edging up during the remainder of this year to around 1.5 million, as old industries shut down and others shed labor, before investment picks up again and new ions appear. · Rising prices. Inflation has now jumped into double digits as industrialists profit from the ending of price controls to restore depressed profit-margins in what is hoped will prove a once-and-for-all price explosion.

 Pegged wages, Companies are allowed to increase wages in line with inflation. But Mr. Barre is threatening to penalize those who give away more and imperil his anti-inflationary strategy by deny-

Similarly with free trade. Theoretically, Mr. Barre believes in the bracing qualities of international competition. But he has already been forced to talk ambiguously about "organized free trade" and it remains to be seen what role France will play in bringing the current Geneva trade-freeing nego-tintions to a successful conclusion by the end of the year.

European Bloc

"More sacrifices for wage earners and more profits for business" is how Socialists in the National Assembly's Finance Commission described the new budget. The Communists dismissed it as "a budget of austerity, unemployment and inflation.

Predictably, Jacques Chirac, the present government's right-wing Gaullist gadfly critic, joined the left in calling for massive reflation, in-stead of helt-tightening.

Even Mr. Barre's traditional sup-poners have been forced onto the defensive, unable to conceal their disappointment with his proposals.

The test of Mr. Barre's liberal reforms is yet to come. In recent months, the French government has started taking a tough line with ailing companies, offering them aid only if they present a sound recov-

If all goes well, Mr. Barre be lieves that inflation will slow down at the end of this year as the present batch of once-and-for-all price increases work through the system and the economy starts to benefit from the strong franc that his policies produce. For the first time since the present recession began, a European government would have succeeded in pushing back the seemingly inexorable spread of government power across the economy, which has become a feature of all Western democracies. But if the strategy falters, or if Mr. Barre's supporters lose their nerve as unemployment climbs, President Valery Giscard d'Estaing may be forced to call a change of economic policy — and of prime minister — later this year.

Kennedy and the Kremlin

It's hard to exaggerate the extent to which relations between the Soviet Union and the United States rise and fall on readings and misreadings of the other country's domestic political scene. In the last 18 months, for instance. President Carter overloaded the Soviet political circuit, which consists of about a dozen people, with excessive public demands for major internal changes and "deep" cuts in strategic arms. Meanwhile, the Soviet leadership sent waves of distaste and alarm through the American political community by its human-rights violations. African adventures and arms-building programs. More recently, both countries have seemed aware that if they did not act more carefully toward each other, substantive improvements in their relations would have to be put off indefinitely. Yet a narrowing of the gap sufficient to allow them to work effectively on their most important piece of common business, a strategic arms limitation treaty, has seemed to lie beyond their grasp.

Precisely here lies the potential importance of Sen. Edward Kennedy's visit to Moscow. He went (ostensibly to a health conference) at a moment when the Kremlin was surely grateful to find a prominent American politician, one closely identified with a moderate viewpoint, ready to breach the no-visits line imposed by the administration after the Kremlin's recent human-rights trials. Presumably, the Kremlin also has heard that Mr. Kennedy may someday run for the presi-

The senator played his part expertly. With a discretion contrasting sharply with the upfront moralistic tones of Jimmy Carter, be asked Leonid Brezhnev about Soviet Jews denied permission to emigrate. As a result, not only the families he asked about, but also a number of families he had not asked about, were assured of release. The Soviet authorities obviously were ready to show that, if their pride and sense of the proprieties are respected, they can behave more flexibly on human rights. Mr. Kennedy's tactful approach let them show it.

On strategic arms, the senator seems to have taken the most responsible course a "liberal" in such circumstances could take. Rather than merely profess his desire for detente, he tried to convey a sense of the political difficulties that have been created in Washington for both the negotiation and ratification of a SALT agreement by the Soviet Union's own policies. That let Mr. Brezhnev express his concern over the United States' new high-technology weapons programs. He also expressed his belief, shared by his guest, that a failure to consummate a mutually acceptable SALT agreement soon would have harmful results extending considerably beyond strategic arms.

The Carter-Kennedy relationship is the stuff of endless popular fascination. In this instance, the senator, by acting in his own way, was in an excellent position to make the administration's point that progress in SALT hinges in large measure on the Kremlin's readiness to "disarm" the American right by conducting a reasonable policy. That does not mean that the strategic equation itself is of no consequence. It means that the political equation is of great consequence. That is what "linkage" is all about. The evidence of the Kennedy visit is that Moscow is getting the message.

THE WASHINGTON POST.

First Aid for Inflation

The Carter administration is now inching uneasily toward wage-price guidelines, a prospect that will be met in most places with mixed emotions. The mixture will be roughly one part resignation to two parts here-we-goagain. President Carter and his economic advisers are entitled to a measure of sympathy. Nobody understands the limitations and vulnerabilities of guidelines better than they. Guidelines are not their first choice as an instrument of economic policy to reduce inflation. Unhappily, they have become the only choice available immediately.

President Carter and his staff have given much earnest effort to the exercise that they call deceleration. In principle, it was a simpler and sounder idea than guidelines. It meant that everyone settled for increases of compensation, profits and prices that would be a utile lower each year than the year before. But everyone politely explained to the president that they couldn't afford to comply, because then everyone else would take advantage of them.

The voluntary guidelines that the White House now contemplates consist merely of a couple of percentages to which the administration wants wage and price increases held. Violators will be identified and exhorted. Some of them may find it more difficult to do business with the federal government. But compliance rests mainly on public spirit and a consensus in favor of restraint. The phrase during the last venture along these lines, in the mid-1960s, was "moral suasion." As it turned out, moral suasion worked fairly well for several years until the summer of 1966. when an airline mechanics strike and, more generally, the pressures generated by the Vietnam War destroyed the guidelines.

How long, and how well, can they be expected to work the next time around? The climate is less favorable now than in the Johnson years. In the early 1960s the country was accustomed to great stability of prices.

In the late 1970s, after a decade of high inflation, enforcing compliance is a matter of breaking habits.

The Johnson guideline was simply the rate at which labor productivity was rising - 3.2 percent a year. It meant that an annual wage increase of 3.2 percent was not inflationary. Since the inflation rate was lower than that. the guideline offered working people a real increase in purchasing power. Currently, of course, that relationship has reversed itself. The inflation rate is vasily higher than productivity. Inflation is evidently going to run about 8 percent this year while the increase in productivity, for reasons that no one fully understands, is zero. Over the past year, in fact, it has been negative. In these circumstances, any wage guideline lower than the inflation rate promises the average wage earner a reduction in real purchasing power - not a very attractive proposition in politi-cal terms. The labor unions disliked the guidelines 15 years ago, and have become only more hostile with the passage of time.

Wage and price guidelines can provide one modest but useful service. They can spotlight, and bring some pressure on, the people who try to grab unusually large increases. But guidelines alone do not constitute an economic policy, and they cannot significantly change the basic inflation rate. To do that requires a much broader range of actions: to increase business investment, to reduce the foreign-trade deficit, to hold down oil consumption, to stabilize the international value of the dollar.

When President Carter announces his guidelines, they will stir up a lot of attention. For a time the papers will be full of arithmetic lessons. Amid the torrent of numbers and hopeful forecasts, readers will need to keep in mind that wage and price guidelines constitute, at best, no more than first aid for

One of the more bizarre aspects of the Camp David summit is the total incompatibility of all three participants, in terms of temperament and background. This is particularly true of Sadat and Begin. Sadat goes for the big gesture, an appeal from the heart, as he showed - all of ten months ago - when he made his pilgrimage to Jerusalem. Begin is all for the small print. Between the two is the born-again Baptist President of the United States. Can the wooded Maryland countryside work some alchemy? Alas, that can be ruled out. The issues at stake are too gritty and real. How should the result be judged. when we know it?

The worst case would be no agreement, not even one for further Israeli-Egyptian meetings. Next less-bad would be the same. except for an announcement that there would be more meetings. Best, but unlikely, would be an agreement on at least some points of substance, with the prospect of more to come. No more meetings and no agreement would be a calamity, especially for Carter and Sadat.

WIDEWATER, Va. - That Professor Langley's airship is a failure was demonstrated beyond question at 2 o'clock yesterday, when the machine broke down during the preparations for its launching. The motor of the aeroplane failed to work properly: both blades of the leftmost propeller were crushed like egg shells, the fragments flying into the engine and damaging it seriously. Experts themselves are ready to admir that radical changes will have to be made in the flying machine before it can be launched.

Even though it has been effected without Washington's official participation, the Pact is considered nearly certain to bring about a more friendly attitude between the two Powers - this despite their clear-cut disagreement on nearly every international question of importance.

Rhodesia Sanctions: The Big If

By Jonathan Power

L ONDON — The impalatable truth behind the oil-sanctions row that has consumed the front pages of British newspapers the last three weeks is simply put: If the United Nations Security Council resolution on sanctions against Rhodesia had been observed to the letter there would today be no war in Rhodesia. There would not be 80,000 men under arms. There would not be 3,000 dead this year. There would probably be no Cuban troops in Africa. There might be no threat of a major East-West collisinn along the cleavage of the southern Africa racial divide. threatening to tear apart the consensus of Western societies in a

Sanctions Flouted

We now know, from the secret but leaked submissions of BP and Shell to a British government inquiry, that for two years — 1966 and 1967 — the oil companies flouted sanctions. They supplied oil to Rhodesia via a British subsidiary owned by both of them based in Lourenco Marques, the capital of the then-Portuguese colony of Mozambique. The oil companies in their defense say that their senior officials were ignorant of what was going on and when they did find out in January of 1968 they went to the British government - in the person of the minister for Commonwealth relations. George Thomson - and discussed an alternative that would avoid Londonregistered companies being directly involved. The alternative agreed on was a swap arrangement with the French oil company Total, whereby Total would supply Rhodesia via Mozambique and Total would be compensated by Sbell and BP delivering matching amounts to Total refinences in South Africa. The assumption apparently held by the oil companies and the gov-ernment was that as long as the British home-registered companies were not directly involved, and any sanction-busting was done by subsidiaries operating under South Af-rican laws or by French companies, then everything was all right.

The fact is that when the oil companies went to see Thomson they had the government by the tail. The oil moved by rail. Infelligence services would presumably have moni-tored the traffic. It was obvious that the British government must revolution 202 years ago dealt with have known that the oil companies the right of a taxed overseas comwere illegally supplying Rhodesia via Mozambique in the period 1966-67. Equally obviously the government for its own reasons had ernment for its own reasons had American parliament undoubtedly chosen not to prosecute then, or the likes of "Lord North" Proximire even warn them. the lines of the statements published last week by Thomson and Wilson. It appears that from the very beginning they had rationalized away the behavior of the oil companies. They had rejected the option of an embargo of South Africa. Britain, they believed, was too economically weak for that. Moreover, with Nixon in the White House and De Gaulle in the Elysee there was a sbortfall of political will all around. In this atmosphere it was easy for them to convince themselves that worrying about this or that route for the oil traffic was so much nitpicking. Yet the mandate was clear and the UN Security Council had voted it unanimously. It was up to the British, having taken the Rhode-sian issue to the United Nations, to have followed up on the enforcement of sanctions.

The British should bave unilaterally closed the Mozambique loop-hole, prosecuted the oil companies held the reins of power.

William Pfaff From Paris:

. . . It is extremely unlikely that Francois Mitterrand will ever become president of the French Republic. He has been a dazzling figure [but] an ambiguous one whom success eludes.

PARIS — François Mitterrand has made his return to the french scene after the long wounded silence that followed last long way to placate the Communications. spring's defeat for the left in France's parliamentary elections. It is a characteristically oblique return, by means of the publication of his latest volume of memoirs (by Flammarion). But the effect is to emphasize what surely is the truth, that Mitterrand is now a figure of the political past for France. the political past for France.

Mitterrand himself resolutely in-sists that he has a future. He insists that he will lead the left in the next national election expected in France, for the presidency in 1981.
But that he will in fact even be the Socialist candidate is not certain. Since last March the knives have been out within the Socialist Party, with Michel Rocard, a man less en-amored of the union with the Communists than Mitterrand, considered the principal rival and eventual challenger. The Socialists were not a particularly united party to begin with, grouping several disparate factions, but they were held together until this year by the intoxicating notion of a national victory. The party's ultimate future now would seem to be to redivide into its old parts, with the more moderate elements moving toward the Giscardien center.

But there also is serious doubt that the Communists would sup-port a Socialist candidate in 1981. As they made perfectly plain in the months that led up to this year's parliamentary vote, they do not see their mission in France as to put the Socialists into power.

François Mitterrand, though, still believes in the Union of the Left. He must, if he himself is to have a political future. He insists that the people will force the left's leaders to compromise. He told a radio audience last week that while the politicians on the left and the parties fight with one another, "the popular reality is completely different." His plan is to encourage popular pressure on the Communists to modify their conservative stance and renew their electoral alliance with the Socialists. He knows, of course, that popular pressure does not go very far with a Communist long way to placate the Commu-nists and get their support. He must have the Communist vote in must have the Communist vote in 1981. If he gets it, he believes, he can win the presidency. And if he becomes president, he also knows that he will have no further need for the Communists. The Socialists, he assumes, will be the largest single party in the National Assembly, and if he has won the presidency he and if he has won the presidency he will again be their undisputed lead-er. He will be in a position to dispense with the Communists, if necessary, and make new alliances as he pleases or needs. He would be master of the political game in France. It is a pleasing prospect. The trouble is that the Communists see all of this just as clearly as does become president of the French Republic. He has been a dazzling figure in France, but also, always, an ambiguous one whom success eludes, He is something of a poet, a man of eloquence and fastidiousness, a remarkable writer and orator, but also, always, he bas seemed a little too ambitious, a little too clever, a little too ready with maneuver and compromise. This has been the case since the 1950s. from the time of the Algerian war, which Mitterrand helped wage as Minister of the Interior at its onset. in 1954, and then as Minister of Justice in the government of Guy Mollet, from 1956 to the crises that began the end of the Third Republic. It was true as he pulled the Socialists together during the party's dark years, after General de Gaulle's return to power, reuniting the left in 1965-1966 and forging the Common Program with the Communists in 1972. But then what confidently had been expected to be his march to victory in 1978 proved a fiscere.

The failure of the left this year was almost certainly the end of a political era in France — that dominated by the politics of class warfare. The country's social and economic changes in recent years have undermined the social base, and also the ideological assumptions, of a party system rooted in the old class structure. This is the reason for Giscard d'Estaing's effort to grasped an evolution in the country which Mitterrand denied.

Last Hurrah

Mitterrand has provided the last burrah for the old left, and it was exactly his ambiguousness and elo-quence that made this possible. With those qualities, be could draw to him elements from the moderate and reformist left that otherwise would have defected to the center in even greater numbers than was the case last March. In the end, he proved a failure. Yet be remains an imposing figure, a man of quality. He writes in his memoirs that public men cannot be judged until their careers are over; history makes the judgment. "I think of those for whom a long futility fin-ished by their having become indis-pensable." One imagines that he had the persisitent frustration of his own career in mind when he wrote that. But it may be that his own indispensable role is already achieved, and that it was to dominate an ending for France, rather than, as be believed, a beginning.

The more so as he seems so happy with the role he now enjoys as a liberal leader in the Senate, the coming bead of its Judiciary Com-

To be sure, there is Carter's low standing in the polls, even when running head-to-head with Kenne-dy, Kennedy no longer believes, as he used to, that Carter is a shoo-in for renomination and reelection. If some third Democrat looked like unhorsing Carter, moreover, Kennedy would not comfortably sit on his hands. But it isn't as though just any Democrat could do that easily. To do what Gene McCarthy did to Lyndon Johnson in 1968, it would require a pure protest candidate, one who is not taken seriously himself but merely gives the voters a chance to express anu-Carter feel-

g. But candidates of that stripe are extremely rare — especially when there is no overwhelming protest issue, such as the Vietnam war. Both Jerry Brown, the California governor, and Pat Movnihan, the New York senator, are too well ator was trying to preempt in advance the "moral" issue that has to be merely protest candidates. to be merely protest candidates. And after them, who is there?

Certainly there is no evidence be showed he could get out of the that Kennedy is positioning himself on the theory that some third can-didate will force him to jump into the race. On the contrary, the dents add up to much less than a game plan. Mrs. Kennedy initiated stances he has been taking on such matters as bealth insurance and detente are far too liberal for a national constituency that is edging to the conservative side.

Kennedy's campaigning schedule this fall, far from being calculated to build up political IOUs, is re-markably limited. Apart from Massachusetts, he is appearing only on behalf of two candidates for governor - Pete Flaherty in Pennsylvania and Dick Celeste in Ohio and seven candidates for the Senate.

Most important of all, there remains the major deterrent - the danger of another tragic disaster in the head of the Kennedy family. At the very least it seems doubtful to me that Edward Kennedy would actively seek the presidency while his mother. Mrs. Rose Kennedy, is still alive.

The tourist business, slowed down by political turmoil, is back in shape, mainly in the Algarve. Lisbon itself, a hilly town with turn-of-the-century buildings and old-fashioned gas lamps sucking out of quaint, oarrow, winding streets, against a background of hills and harbor, is an enchanting

Portugal has a lot to offer the homemaker, with most of it firmly oed to centuries of artisan work.

First, there are unique, and cheaply priced, ocedlework rugs. Depending oo whether a big or small stitch is preferred, the prices vary drastically but oever become extravagant. The most interesting place is Casa Quintao, at 30-Rua changes and start around 260 escuivens, with a smaller branch at Rua Serpa Pinto, 12-A.

The place is large and somewhat forbidding but that has its advan-tages because, unlike smaller shops, it offers a wider selection. Casa Quintao supplies the equally large Place Clichy store in Paris and its salesmen are used to dealing with both professional and custom-

A Splashy Rug Some of the patterns oo stock are delightful. For instance, a big stitch, splashy flower rug, in green, red, ivory and gray, and measuring I meter by 1.62 meters, came to 8,910 escudos (almost $200). But for the same price, one can send one's own pattern. Ao American movie star bad a couple of rugs made for his bouse in California, one a composition of bright parrots on sea-blue background and the other a pastel seashell motif. The firm, however, will take at least three mooths to deliver.

Tiles, or azulejos, and assorted ceramics are also a Portuguese specialty. One good place, which is also used to shipping abroad (that is one shop where you won't want to cash and carry) is Fabrica de Faiancas e Azulejos Sant'Anna, at Calcada da Boa Hora, 96. The firm was founded in 1741 and stocks just about every pattern of azulejo in existence. For bathrooms, you can have a classic blue and white, stylized flowery pattern at 27.50 escudos apiece or rosebuds in pink and green at 30 escudos. Rustic pastoral scenes, for kitchen walls, can be had at 35 escudos apiece.

Among the many objects on dis-play, there were two handsome, lassic, blue-and-white lamps, with hand-painted shades to match at 2,100 escudos, colorful birds at 650 escudos, enormous, highly decora-tive barrel-shaped plant holders at 4,050 escudos and big, blue and white elephants (that can serve as But Lisbon is also famous for its antique, blue and white tiles, reproducing sea, religious or field scenes. The best place to get copies is Fa-brica Ceramica Viuva Lamego. Largo do Intendente, 25. Embroidered and household linens are another much sought after Portuguese specialty. One of the ment store, Ramiro Leao, Rua Garrett, 83, which is more than 100 years old. Go there if only to look at the frescoed ceilings, art nouveau brass railings and big Caixa signs over the cashier desks, and to ride the beoch-lined elevator (seating room only, for four people).

On the second floor, you will find a good selection of pure, silky-thin cotton sheets (at 650 escudos) superbly linen-embroidered ones (at around 2,500 escudos, which is a fraction of what such sheets cost anywhere else in Europe). But that is strictly a notourist area, so act as in Rome and be prepared to wait just like any other naove.

lf your pocketbook is sturdier and your taste more sophisticated. you might try Margarida Machado Arruda, at Rua 25 de Abril, 7-1, at Cascais, a small, St. Tropez-like village, 20 minutes and a 300-escudo taxi drive from Lisbon.

There, you can have your ta-blecloths embroidered to match your favorite dinner set, but that is special and will run to 25,000 escudos, stiff but, again, a lot cheaper than in most other countries.

Portuguese silver is another field

Portuguese silver is another field worth invesogating. For sheer beauty and strictly sterling pieces, Joalharia Mergulhao, at 162 Rua de S. Paulo, 162-B, goes back to 1895 and is highly recommendable. There is a wide selection and the bouse will make anything you want, be it copies of famous 18th-century French Saint Germain patterns or heavily embossed traditional Portuguese. This is for serious shopping, with tall, handsome rious shopping, with tall, handsome candlesticks at 85,500 escudos, decorative tureens (which they also make for Tiffany in New York) at 67,000 escudos and little romantic French tureens, with rose-bud covered to 20,000 escudos are the 10,000 ers at 30,000 escudos.

and a good choice of gifts, try Chave 44, at Avenida Rovisco Pais, ware (mainly for bathroom use), Portico, at Rua da Misericordia 3ll EEE; and for cork, another Portuguese specialty, Mister Cork, at Rua da Escola Politechica, 4.

Strange as this may seem, even fashion is worth looking into in Lis-bon. One of the best boutques around is part of and above the Harriett Hubbard Ayer beauty salon, at Rua Manuel Jesu Coelho.

Owner Eva Arie is a smart competent woman who visits Paris and Milan salons several times a year, buys a lot and also acquires couture paper patterns that are reproduced in Portugal with Portuguese fabwhere buying power is much smaller than in other European countries," Mrs. Arie, who knows how far she cannot go, said.

Besides imported Cacharel or Pancaldi blouses, Mrs. Arie had a remarkable, loden-type coat, cut on a Paris pattern at only 5,000 escudos (or $110.) A Dior or Scherrer copy, both lace-trimmed chiffoo cocktail dresses, were priced be-tween 9,000 and 12,000 escudos.

Worked as Chemist

The whole setup is well worth visiting anyhow. It all started when Rudolph Arie, a native of Sofia, went to study chemistry in Lyons to be able to run the family's perfume business. He ended up in Israel, worked as a chemist for sev-eral firms, including Revion, and fi-nally met and married Mrs. Arie, a circumstance which brought him to Portugal. Here, he represents Harriett Hubbard Ayer products and the beauty and hairdressing saloos were really planoed as an advertis-ing gimmick.

The quality of services is oo a par with the best in Paris or Loodon. There are 12 beauty cabins. with Paris-trained attendants, excellent hairdressers, manicures and pedicures and prices so low that a New York tourist recently went there every day, just for the beck of it. A shampoo and set comes to 120 escudos, a cut is 150, manicure 60 and pedicure 120 — or just about what you would have to leave in tips in Paris or New York.

Chinons, Bourgueils Can Outgrow 'Little' Epithet

By Jon Winroth

CHINON. France. Sept. 13 look down their coses at Chinon and its twin from across the Loire, Bourgueil. They are called pleasant, traity "little" wines that best accompany a light luncheon.

Luncheon, indeed! Have they never beard of Rabelais and his own Pantagruelian consumption of these wines? At that time Francois I was king of France and he spent much of his time in one or another of his Loire chateaux.

Perhaps because the king shared Rabelais' enthusiasm for Chinon and Bourgueil, they were court fa-vorites and considered among the best red wines of the realm. Claret was barely fit to ship off to the English, and io any case, it did oot come into its own until it was bot-tled-aged, a development that took place more that a century later.

Wioes in those days were not aged, but drunk straight from the barrel from year to year. And this certainly gave an advantage to the Loire reds, for they are as pleasant to drink young as when, in the right vintages, they may be aged for 20 years or more

Medoc. You could, however, en-liven more than one tasting of red Graves by slipping in a Chinon from a good year, especially one from a grower as conscientious as Charles Joguet. He lives in the vil-lage of Sazilly, upstream a few ki-lometers on the Vienne from Chi-

Joguet does not do things by halves. Unlike most growers in the region who, blend everything they grow into a single curee, he keeps each type of wine separate and bot-iles each separately.

Thus, be has red wine from young vines (6 to 15 years old) and red wice from old vines (40 to 76 years old). The old-vine wines are further subdivided according to the soil they are grown on, clay and sand or the local soft limestooe called suffeau. Joguet also makes a delightfully refreshing rose.

A tasting in his cellars took me back to 1959, two years after loguet inherited 2.5 hectares of vines from his father.

Joguet had begun as a sculptor but he threw birnself into winemak ing, determined to make the most of what he had. He has enlarged his vineyards to 11 hectares, not all of which are in production.

He has worked very closely with Chinon and claret have some- Jacques Puisais, head of the analytthing else in common - their ical laboratory at Tours, and the grapes. A 1976 from old vines won a gold medal at the Paris Saloo de l'Agriculture. It is a full, complete, very well-balanced wine, ready to drink and yel capable of aging well. The 1964 is still young but very elegant with great depth and fruit. Its acidity should belp it to contin-

The 1959 is a richly aromacc, even funky, wine, mellow but very sound. What is terrible about these wines is that no more are available, even of the 1976. These came from Joguel's private cellar and even be has precious few. This is the problem everywhere in Chinoo and Bourgueil: Everything is sold and drunk up much too fast, depriving the great years of a chance to show what they are really worth. Perhaps if the condescending drinkers were not in such a burry to drink up these "little" wines, they might just discover how truly re-markable they can become.

The Pecan Is One Nut That Has Stayed American

THE PECAN IS a nut originally 100 percent American which has been allowed to remain 95 percent American. Most of the tasty new foods Europeans discovered in America eventually made their way around the world, some quickly, some slowly, but the United States has been left in almost complete possession of the pecan.

Pecans have been planted, spar-ingly, in some far-flung areas — New South Wales in Australia, Natal in South Africa — but they are not much eaten there, nor, indeed, anywhere outside of America though the outs can be found in luxury food stores in large cities throughout the world. Even in export is remains American: The chief foreign buyer of U.S. pecans

The pecan may even be American in the narrowest sense of that term, a product of the United States alone, to the exclusion of the other Americas. Reference books usually say that its native territory is the United States and Mexico, but it is doubtful that it had progressed into Mexico even as far as that country's northern highlands before Texans took it there. Texas may well be where this out started. despite its scientific name of Carya ioensis, the Illinois hickory.

Illinois lies in the northernmost part of the pecan's range, so its ori-gin should presumably be sought nearer the center. It was probably named for Illinois because that is where it was first encountered by explorers given to naming new finds — presumably French missionaries pushing southward from the St. Lawrence Valley. De Soto probably saw the pecan first, at Madrid (in present-day Alabama), about 1540, but he did not bother to tack n scientific name onto it.

Jefferson's Trees

This was on the eastern limit of the pecan's range of that time, for though it grows along the Atlantic Coasi today, it was introduced there only when Thomas Jefferson moved some trees from the Mississippi Valley to plant them at Monticello. He gave a few to George Washington, who planted them oo March 25, 1775—just in time, one might say, for if he bad delayed a month longer he would probably have had other things on his midd than planting pecans. As it was, the trees were installed at Mount Ver-oon, and three of them are still vegetable dish; and they roasted

Just as we had better look farther south than Illinois for the birthplace of the pecan, so we bad better look farther west than Alabama. Texas is not unlikely: it is certainly the place where this nut is most appreciated today. Commenting on the circumstance that almost all the butter-pecan ice cream made in the United States is eaten in Texas, an expert on this subject remarked. "Texans will buy anything with pe-cans in it." There are estimated to be 70 million nut-bearing pecan trees in Texas, most of them wild and not particularly productive; hence, it is Georgia, not Texas, which is the leading pecan-pro-duciog state today.

"Pecan" is an American Indian word, which appears in varied. though always recognizable, forms in the languages of all the tribes which shared its habitat. Pre-Columbian Indians used pecans extensively. They pressed oil from the nuts and seasoned cooked fruits with it; they ground them into meal vegetable dish; and they roasted hem to carry on hunting trips as a fortifying emergency ration, for which they were well litted, for pecans produce 687 calories per 100 grams of nuts, which are rich in

Sweet and Mild

If the pecan has failed to gain popularity outside of America, it is not hecause it lacks jastiness - it is agreeably sweet and mild — but he-cause it lacks originality: The fla-vor is a good deal like that of the walnut and as the walnut was already well established in the Old World before the pecan was found in the New, there was only minimum incentive for hringing in a new nut which would not have added much to the gamut of flavors already available.

The pecan, removed from its shell, looks like a walnut, too, tormented into the same complicated convolutions - a walnut which you might have squeezed between your palms to force it from near roundness into a narrowed lengthened oval (hence, a more appropriate name for it than the Illinois hickory is another of its scientific tags. Car ra olivaelormis, the olive-shaped hickory). Another obstacle to the spread o the pecan is its crotchety nature: It is difficult to grow. Wild trees are highly erratic both in the number and the quality of the nuts they produce, and cultivated trees though more reliable, are finicky About 100 named varieties (which have been more or less standard ized quite recently) are available commercially, but only about a score of them can be expected to give profitable yields, and even with these the pecan grower must be very careful about the kind he chooses to plant, for each variety demands its own favored kind of mini-climate and peculiarities of soil and will sulkily refuse to pro-duce many nuts or good nuts if it doesn't get them. Neither wild nor cultivated varieties grow true from seed, so the type wanted must be budded onto rootstock, a laborious process which most growers leave to the nurseries.

Focus on Hessische Landesbank - Girozentrale -

"Half of Germany's top 10 banks are Frankfurt-based. We're one of them."

Let's start with Frankfurt. Why is Frankfurt so important?

"Frankfurt ranks among the world's foremost banking and financial centers. 152 German banking institutions operate here, and Frankfurt has 161 international banks, more than any other city in Continental Europe.

The Bundesbank is headquartered here, and the Frankfurt Stock Exchange is Germany's largest, accounting for nearly half of the stock exchange transactions, 57 per cent of dealings in foreign shares and 80 per cent of the business in foreign fixed-interest securities.

Perhaps less well known internationally is that Hessische Landesbank is one of Frankfurt's big native-born banks. Half of Germany's top 10 banks are Frankfurtbased. We're one of them."

Now about the bank itself. What's its size and structure?

"With total assets of DM 42 billion. Hessische Landesbank is Germany's 8th largest bank, 3rd among Landesbanks. As a governmentbacked regional bank, our liabilities are guaranteed jointly by the State of Hesse and its Sparkassen and Giro Association. We also act as banker to the State of Hesse, from which our name is derived, and perform clearing functions for the 52 regional Sparkassen."

"We concentrate on wholesale banking and medium to long-term fixed-rate DM lending. As a German universal bank, our facilities cover the full range of commercial and investment banking services. Because we don't operate a branch network, we can devote our time and energy to wholesale banking activities.

In recent years we have strengthened our international investment banking capabilities considerably. For example, in 1977 we participated in 289 international issues. And we provide comprehensive investment management and brokerage services, including securities trading. Our membership of the Frankfurt Stock Exchange facilitates dealing in quoted shares and fixed-interest securities."

And sources of funds?

"A large part of our funding is done by issuing bearer bonds and SD Certificates (Schuldscheindarlehen). The total in circulation is more than DM 20 billion."

Who are the bank's main clients? "As a wholesale bank, our service facilities are tailored for large. internationally active corporations, foreign governments, and other financial institutions, as well as subsidiaries of international companies operating in Germany. As bankers to the State of Hesse, we naturally support its state-wide and municipal programs. We also work closely with Hesse's Sparkassen and their clients, especially on the foreign side."

How do you see your position developing internationally?

"Frankly, a number of German banks offer similar high-quality services, and some of them have a head start on us in the international field. Without neglecting our home base in Frankfurt, we have assembled a team of banking professionals devoted to building a strong international track record based on pragmatic banking principles, the most modern technical and support facilities, and the highest standards of client service. Banking in Frankfurt is quite competitive, and the banks who try harder for their clients and give them fast, personal service often have the edge. This is one of our major objectives."

Upbeat World Bank Report Praises LDCs

By Hobart Rowen

WASHINGTON, Sept. 13 (WP) In a surprisingly upbeat annual report, the World Bank today said that developing countries had adjusted to world economic problems better than their richer partners and that their rapid growth would continue into the mid-1980s.

At the same time, the bank ex-pressed concerns about rising protectionist sentiment, warning rich nations against creation of "artifi-cial barriers" to small-nations exports that will only delay the "meyitable" industrialization process in the Third World.

The bank's report, preliminary to the annual joint meeting with the International Monetary Fund Sept. 25-28 in Washington, also reveals

The Bank will give new emphasis to loans for exploring for oil in Third World countries. Loans for six to eight projects amounting to $500 million are scheduled annually beginning with fiscal 1981. Excellent harvests, especially in Southeast Asia, have considerably eased food shortages. The report targets set by bank president Robert McNamara in his Nairobi speech in 1973, including a goal of a 40-percent increase for agricul-ture lending, and been achieved.

 Total loans for fiscal 1978 ex-acily hit the planned target of $6.1 billion. But tentative commitments of $6.8 billion for fiscal 1979 are contingent on doubling of the bank's capital. For the time being, $6.8 billion is the target. But officials said that it could be diminished if hopes for the cpaital in-crease — to be discussed fully at

Nevertheless, the thrust of the re-port stresses the need to be on guard against increasing barriers so that trade can expand among the developed and developing coun-tries. It notes that 28 percent of total manufactured goods export from industrialized countries go to

The bank's increased attention to oil development stems from inflated world prices that make practical exploration of many prospective areas, formerly not thought to be competitive. This effort also had the blessing of the major nations at the Bonn economie summit and earlier from the Conference on Interoational Economic Cooperation.

The bank's first oil development loan — $150 million — went to India for the Bombay High offshore field. The report said that as is true for all minerals, the bank can finance only a small portion of the financial requirements for LDC pe-troleum exploration, which it estimated at $6 billion in 1975 dollars. Most of the money for actual exploration, it said, will best be left to risk capital.

For the World Bank group as a whole, commitments in fiscal 1978 were $6.098 billion for the hank itself; $2.3 billion for the soft-loan affiliate, the International Development Association and $338 million for the International Finance Corp. that assists the private sector.

OPEC Members Show Payments Deficit

By Clyde H.Farnsworth

WASHINGTON, Sept. 13 (NYT) - Fresh evidence that oil-exporting countries are experiencing a fi-nancial squeeze has come in figures just published by the International Monetary Fund.

The IMF has found that as a group, the 13 members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries registered a combined deficit of $1.7 billion in their international payments in the first quarter of this year.

Analysis interpret the first-quarter figures as signifying a swing back toward the pattern of international payments that prevailed before the quadrupling of oil prices five years ago. Although some spe-cial factors were at work, such as the huge build-up of oil inventories in consumer countries during last year's final quarter, the deficit is seen as pointing to a longer term trend in which oil surpluses are gradually being reduced.

The provisional accounts were published by the IMF two weeks before its annual meeting in Washington.

Third Deficit

The first-quarter deficit was the largest of the three quarterly deficits that the OPEC nations bave reported since the 1973-74 price increase, which catapulted OPEC earnings and produced deep uncertainties about the world's future financial bealth. Anxiety arose because of the dependence of indus-trial countries on the oil exporters and the fear that exporters might use their oil to destabilize economic and political institutions.

Exports Off

In the first quarter, OPEC ship-ments of 28.3 million barrels daily compared with 31.5 million in last year's first quarter. Total exports (mainly oil) were $32.9 billion com-pared with $35.8 billion a year ago. A lower-valued dollar, combined with worldwide economie sluggishness that weakened demand for oil products, brought about the reduced dollar volume

The OPEC countries accumulated surpluses based on earnings in foreign transactions minus pay-ments of $180 hillion between 1973 and 1977. At the same time, however, the appetite of the OPEC countries for products from the industrialized countries has risen, in some cases even faster than the surpluses.

A Clarification

An Aug. 9 nrticle, "Sime Darby Rides the Acquisition Trail," stated that Sime Darby chairman Tun Tan Siew Sin said that the company "is pulling out of Europe." The company says this is not the case. "We are actively pursuing invest-ment opportunities" in Asia and Australia as well as Europe, Tun Tan says.

If this goes on much longer, this might induce another increase in the price of oil."

Strong Language

Mr. Fukuda, in unexpectedly strong language during an im-promptu speech at the end of an hour-long press conference, said the Japanese government had communicated its concern about the dollar and possibile oil-price increases to the United States and the oil producing world. Mr. Fukuda has been visiting oil producing states in the Gulf this week, including Iran, the United Arab Emirates, Qatar and Saudi Arabia...

"If the oil producing coun-tries raise the price of oil to keep up with the depreciation of the American dollar, this will

Prince Fahd, in turn, explained "in detail" Saudi Arabia's views on peace in the Middle East. Mr. Fukuda said, which helped improve my un-value of the dollar and the price of oil may indeed start a vicious cycle. This cycle is going to be very difficult to stop. This will be extremely harmful to the world economy."

Mr. Fukuda commended Saudi Arabia's commitment to the dollar in OPEC meetings as "extremely helpful to the stability of the world."

"On the part of the oil-producing countries. I would like to say all of the measures, particularly the price measures. I hope will be moderate and reasoned ones." he said.

Wall St. Prices Ease; Dow Off 6.84 Points

NEW YORK, Sept. 13 [Reuters]

— Prices on the New York Stock Exchange retreated today in active trading as concern over the out-come of the Camp David summit restrained investors.

Concerns were heightened by a statement from a top Saudi official who said Arab countries will have to review the situation if Israel blocks a peace settlement.

Analysts said many investors were also dismayed by heavy speculation in gaming stocks. They noted institutional investors frequently back out of such markers and cited a fall in the price of sever-al big issues, notably IBM.

The Dow Jones industrial average lost 6.84 points to 899.60 and declines led advances 853 to 704. Volume rose to 43.34 million shares from yesterday's 34.4 million. The Federal Reserve entered the government securities market to provide temporary bank reserve through overnight repurchase pacts with federal funds trading at 81-2 percent, dealers said. General Motors reported a sharp drop in early-September car sales to its lowest daily selling rate this year. Analysts said the disappointing results may have also contributed to market weakness. It lost % to

Dollar Off Sharply in Light Trade

LONDON, Sept. 13 (AP-DI) — The dollar plummmeted against most major currencies, especially the Swiss franc, in extremely ner yous foreign exchange trading late today.

The sharp depreciation was not tied to any one new development. Instead, dealers said a number of factors combined to trigger the selloff, namely increasing concern about the outcome of the Mideast talks, nervousness about the Senate debate on the natural-gas bill, a lowering expectation of new U.S. actions to help the dollar and profit-taking. Several dealers maintained that the extent of the dollar's exchange rate movement had been "exaggerated" because many operators were "reluctant" to quote rates, thus "rates were thin and hard to find," one trader said. The amounts of money on offer were relatively large — in the area of $10 million to as much as $20 million at a time compared with a recent range of $3 million to 55 million - further exaggerating movements, dealers

The dollar lost the most ground against the Swiss franc, falling 1.6 percent, or 2.54 centimes from late yesterday, to 1.5913 francs. It shed 1.2 percent against sterling, which rose 1.58 cents to $1.9618. The dollar lost 0.8 percent, or 1.6 pfennig, against the Deutsche mark to 1.9780 DM.

The dollar eased 0.6 percent against both the ven and French franc to 190.30 yen and 4.3425

The Canadian dollar recouped to 86.11 U.S. cents from vesterday's record low of 85.85 cents, Meanwhile, gold finished at $210.55, up from $208.35 yesterday

FINANCIAL NEWS AND NOTES

Montedison Has Light-Oil Find

Montedison, the Italian petrochemical company, says it has found an cilfield off the southeast coast of Sicily. Reliable sources say the field may be extensive and be of light, top quality oil. A Montedison spokesman says, bowever, drilling of a third offshore well will be needed before knowing the extent and possible industrial exploitation of the field. Oil, and possible industrial exploitation of the field. Oil, reported extremely light and similar to Libyan petroleum, gushed out from the one well at 10,500 feet of depth. A second well bas been just completed. "It is a field which should give oil for 15 years," one source reported, although Montedision was more cautious. The news and reports that an unidentified Arab group has made a bid for a 35 billion lire (about $38.5 million) investment into the company, sent Montedison shares sources 40 percent on the sent Montedison shares soaring 40 percent on the Milan stock market from 234 to 325 lire each.

Sony Sells U.S.-Made Goods in Japan

Sony Corp. of America says its Sony Vidco Products Co. will sett two U.S.-made video accessories in Japan. The accessories are a two-machine editor kit, the APK-1000, and a crystal calibrator for test and alignment of recorder operating conditions, the XC-1000. The products are designed for use with the Sony BHV-1000, a one-incb compact belical-scan vi-

Deere Expects Record Earnings

Deere & Co. expects another record year of sales and earnings, topping 1977's previous record results. Chairman William Hewitt says. In fiscal 1977, ended Oct. 31, Deere had net income of $255.6 million on sales of $3.6 hillion. Company officials also say Deere plans to increase its farm equipment produc-tion schedules in the United States by about 7 percent in the 1979 fiscal year.

Ciba-Geigy Net Decline Manageable

Ciba-Geigy should be able to hold the decline in 1978 profits to manageable proportions, says executive committee member Alex Krauer. He says that the fall in profits resulting from the appreciation of the Swiss frane has been parity offset by higher turn-over measured in local currencies, cost-saving measures and the tower cost of imported raw materials. He gives no detailed forecast for profit this year, which the company said earlier this summer would be below the group operating profit of 420 million francs posted for 1977.

The big money bank.

Any bank can lend money. But it takes a big money bank to lend big money.

There are only a handful of such banks in the world, and Security Pacific Bank is one of

We're one of the ten largest banks in the United States, with assets of more than nineteen billion dollars.

So if you're looking for a big money bank to handle the big share of a loan syndication, you should consider Security Pacific Bank.

The big money bank.

THE STAKES HAVE NEVER BEEN HIGHER, THE PROBLEM NEVER MORE COMPLEX.

The third in a series of working conferences sponsored by the International Herald Tribune and Forex Research Limited

LONDON, November 20 and 21, 1978.

This comprehensive examination of currency exposure will focus on the corporate treasury and decision-making aspects of the problem, and will feature case studies from Nestié S.A., Gulf Oil, Tate & Lyle and other multinetional corporations.

A distinguished group of international bankers and monetary authorities-including representatives from the European Economic Community, Union Benk of Switzerlend, Amsterdam-Rotterdam Bank, Lazard Frères and Morgan Guaranty Trust-will examine the impact of the much discussed European Monetary System (EMS), multicurrency borrowing, cash manegement techniques, international financing and other subjects.

For more information about this important international conference, please contact: The International Herald Tribuna, Foreign Exchange Conference 181, av. Charlas-de-Gaulle, 92200 Neuilly-sur-Seine, France Telephone: 747.12.65, ext. 260

NEGLECTED LIVES

By Stephen Alter. Farrar, Straus and Giroux. 179 pp. $8.95.

Reviewed by Anatole Broyard

than any other country in the world. Besides these traditions, it seems to have little else hut poverty and hope. As a French poet observed, India used to be a country composed exclusively of ecclesiastics. Everyone was a sort of priest, and now some other religion has to be found to replace what is crumbling. Progress is a parody of religion, and many Indians are caught between parody and picty.

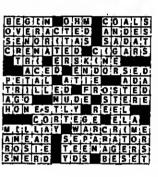

In "Neglected Lives," Stephen Alter has chosen as his central characters a group of people who can live oeither at the heart of Indian life nor totally outside of it. They are Anglo-Indians, ambiguous creatures trying to come to term with an ambiguous culture. Some are nostalgic — their versioo of religion — and others are mod-ern and see themselves as the secular prophets of the future.

Lionel, the 20-year old Anglo-In-dian hero of "Neglected Lives," has just been sent from Lucknow to Debrakot, a remote hill town, because he had disgraced himself and his parents hy impregnating a Hin-du girl whom he can never marry because East is still East and half-West is still West in their social cir-

In Dehrakot, he lives with his father's closest friend, a retired Anglo-Indian brigadier, who sees himself as an exiled Englishman, although he has never been to Eng-land. Exile is a cross to bear which distracts one from a sense of per-sonal failure. It is the life-long sulk of the aggrieved.

Liooel's father and the brigadier used to swap wives and there's some question as to whether Lionel may oot be the old soldier's son. Since the hrigadier has never had

In an eveo more powerful scene, the disappointed brigadier stalks Lionel with a rifle, as if he too were an animal. He regards Lionel's cowardice as proof that he cannot be his son and the death of his last hope fills his heart with murder.

"Neglected Lives" suffers from a rather ramshackle structure in which several characters tell their stories in the first person. The effeet is not mosaic or kaleidoscopic, but disintegrating. The brigadier's wife is a stereotypical drunkard who mourns her barrenness and talks about her girlhood affairs. Liooel himself is a rather vague and passive character. It is never clear what he wants, and a character who doesn't want anything is a page torn out of the novel.

Alter was born in India and some of his descriptions are quick sharp glimpses of a place he knows very well. He writes that everybody wbo's ever come and conquered India has built gardens. If nothing else. India inspires and fosters gardens. He says that evening falls over Lucknow like a silk scarf, a line that betrays an ambivalent love. Stephen said of the brigadier that you could tell immediately that he was military, perhaps because of the way his head cocked back a little on his neck like the hammer oo a revolver.

"Neglected Lives" ends with a rather sketchy and unconvincing love affair. But perhaps that is what exiles do, perbaps their lives, by definitioo, are sketchy and uncon-vincing, and Alter, in his first oovel, is not yet able to see beyond this patchy gesture,

BRIDGE

By Alan Truscott

Freedom of information has been an integral part of bridge long before it became a political issue. Any agreements you have with your partner, whether they coocern bid-ding, leads or defensive signaling, your opponents are entitled to know about.

If the agreements concern the artificial conventions that are common in tournaments, there is little problem. The information is recorded on the coovention card, and the partner of the player who makes the artificial hid will say "alert," allowing the opposents to ask questions if they so wish.

Matters are much more tricky when the agreements coocern mat-ters of style — whether a hid is forcing or not, for example. In such cases a player is entitled to ask, but it is then entirely proper to answer. if true, "We have oo agreement." You do not have to tell the opponents what you guess about your partner's band based oo your own bolding or your knowledge of the Experts often oeed to know about oegative infereoces that may he available: "What would it have meant in the had bid so-and-so instead?" This is a legitimate question, and any expert would answer it to the best of his ability. Oddly eoough, by a strange quirk of the lawmakers, this possibility is oot provided for in the laws. Technically you are supposed to extract the information you need by a reverse question related only to the hid ac-ually made: "Are there any oegative inferences you can draw from that bid?" It is doubtful whether this backwards approach would have helped South on the diagrammed deal, but luckily for the declarer. West ob-served the spirit of the laws rather than the letter. Against four hearts, South would oo doubt have led a spade, thus finding the only way to present de-clarer with his contract. So it was just as well for South that be persevered to four spades, reaching a contract that was poor but not

Before the play began South asked East if the three heart bid had any special meaning. He received a negative reply which was misleading, although not deliberately so. South asked a follow-up question which the lawmakers, as distinct from the serious players, would frown oo: "What would it have meant if he had bid two spades?"

Few partnerships have any agreement about the meaning of a cue-hid by a passed hand, so the probable answer to this question was "We haven't discussed it." But as it happened in this case East knew the answer: "It shows the same as three hearts, but guarantees first or second-round spade cootrol." This was helpful and significant, and clearly one question should have been enough. But not unnaturally, East had not considered the pegative inference. He should bave explained that three hearts denied, or tended to deny, first or secood-round cootrol.

Armed with this informatioo South played skillfully — too skillfully as it turned out. He could have been beaten if the defenders had led clubs quickly, establishing a ruff for West in that suit, but bearts were led and continued.

The secood heart lead was ruffed, and dummy was entered with a diamood lead. A trump was lead, and when East played low, South confidently played the king. He knew from the answer to his questions that West had begun with a doubletoo queen of spades or a small doubletoo. It is easy to see that South could now have brought home his contract hy playing a second round of trumps. But he would then have been in some danger, from his perspecuve, of losing a trick to the club jack. With normal distribution of the side-suits there was a way to bring bome the cootract without having to guess in clubs. South entered dummy with another diamond lead and ruffed the last heart.

Feeliog happy, he led his diamond ace and threw a club from the dummy. He intended to lead a trump oext and endplay East, who would either have to lead a club, solving the problem in that suit, or give a ruff-and-sluff.

But to South's consternation. East ruffed the third round of diamonds with the spade ace. He was still end-played, but West's spade queen survived to take the setting trick. The result was exactly what it would have been if South had had no information about the trump suit and had misguessed at the fourth trick.

Dennis Hull Retires

DETROIT, Sept. 13 (AP) — Dennis Hull, 33, has retired from pro hockey, the Detroit Red Wings announced. The younger brother of Bobby Hull played 13 seasons for the Chicago Black Hawks, sat nut of the start of last season, then joined Detroit in December.

Rememberances Of Swoons Past

By Joseph Durso

NEW YORK, Sept. 13 (NYT) — They're calling it "the Boston massacre," and with good reason. The Yankees went up from New York and wiped out the Red Sox in four devastating games. How could it happen? "I don't know what the hell is happening to us." confessed Don Zimmer, the crewcut 47-year-old manager of the Red Sox. "Seven weeks ago we were doing the same thing, and they were floundering. Now we're floundering.

Not only floundering, but also reviving memories of the great collapses in major-league lore. Like the 1949 Red Sox, who led the Yankees by one game with only two to go and dropped both. Or the St. Louis Cardinals the same week of the same year, selling World Series tickets and then blowing four straight to the sixth-place Pittsburgh Pirates and the eighth-place Chicago Cubs and thereby blowing the pennant.

The Classic Case

Don't forget the 1951 Brooklyn Dodgers, who on Aug. 12 looked fat and safe with a 131/2-game lead over the New York Giants, who earlier had lost 11 straight. But the Giants backed away, overtook the Dodgers on the final day, trailed by 4-1 as late as the ninth inning of the third playoff game and then finally scored four runs to win it. And Bobby Thomson did you-know-what with two men on base in the last balf of the last inning of the six-month season.

In 1960 an entire league collapsed in September when the Yankees won 15 straight down the stretch to win the pennant. Then they outscored the Pittsburgh Pirates, 55 runs to 27, in seven games and still lost the World

May pitched a three-hitter for his first victory since June 5 as Mon-Phillies of 1964. They were leading by 7½ games with only two weeks to go. Then Willie Davis of the Dodgers beat them by stealing home, and the Phillies dropped 10 straight and the pennant.

The 1978 Red Sox haven't lost anything yet, unless you count their 14-game lead and their sanity. But they stand a sporting ebance to join those other clubs in the competition for the most stunning September, swoon.

All-Summer Swoon

In fairness to the Red Sox, though, their September swoon was preceded by July and August swoons. At the All-Star Game in mid-July, they were resting on their chubby laurels with 57 victories, 26 defeats and a .687 pace, the best in baseball. If they played only .500 ball the rest of the way, the Yankees would have to play .700 ball to catch up.

That's exactly what happened. The Red Sox since then have played .500 ball, winning 30 and losing 30 before they took the field last night and lost to the Baltimore Orioles. In that time, the Yankees played .736 ball, winning 39 and losing 14. And on Sunday, when the Boston massacre was complete, the Yankees indeed had managed to catch up.

Why did the Red Sox collapse? Sparky Anderson, the manager of the Cincinnati Reds, once offered this theory on September swoons:

"Baseball is a test of stamina. With night games, jet travel, coast-to-coast flying and a 162-game season, only the strongest survive. No matter how strong you seem in June, you're going to be pushing in September. If there's any weakness, it'll show up then."

That, of course, doesn't explain the Yankees' strength in September. But even in July, the Red Sox were showing signs of pbysical strain: Carl Yasırzemski's bad back, Rick Burleson's ankle, Butch Hobson's elbow, Mike Torrez's finger, Jim Rice's toe, George Scott's 1-for-32 fainting spell, Bill Lee's retreat. They were almost as badly mauled as the Yankees. It's a wonder either team found the strength to stagger into September.

The difference now is that the Yankees have mended, physically and spiritually, under Bob Lemon, the calm soul who replaced boisterous Billy Martin. The Red Sox. meanwhile, went from bad to worse.

Add Other Problems

Now, for example, the 39-year-old Yastrzemski has a bad left wrist to go with his bad back, Hobson can't throw, Lee can't pitch, Carlton Fisk has a cracked rih and Dwight Evans can't see up or down, after a beaning. "We've got the best record in baseball," Zimmer observed in July, when the long swoon set in, "and we're in a terrible slump."

Well, at least they no longer bave the best record in baseball to offend their sense of irony. Not after the debacle of last weekend, the most startling switch of the baseball season. The most startling that is, unless the Red Sox bind up their wounds, regain their vitality, revive their spirits, turn on their tormentors in Yankee Stadium this weekend and somehow rise again from the ashes of the Boston massacre.

Considering Spinks's impressive performance in upsetting Ali last February in his eighth professional fight, and Ali's sluggish victories over Earnie Shavers and Alfredn Evangelista in 1977, logic is against the former champion.

Hornung said on the air that the Redskins had "worked out the day before and found New England's game plan in the locker room."

They made a few adjustments offensively and defensively," said Hornung, "If you've got your oppo-nent's game plan a day ahead of time, you're in business."

Off the air, Hornung said: "I was told it was something called a 'sbort list.' Each team has a list of plays for their players — things they might run in short-yardage situations, that kind of thing. It can help a defense, and sometimes it can't."

At first Washington's coach, Jack Pardee, called the report "absurd" and said be would not comment on it. However, after Washington newspapers reported that team sources confirmed that a mimeographed sheet with New England's offensive plays had been found, he gave his version of what happened.

Autopsy Done On Peterson

MILAN, Sept. 13 (UPI) - Doctors performed an autopsy today on Ronnie Peterson, the Swedish driver who died after a crash in the Italian Grand Prix, and confirmed that death was caused by embolisms in the bloodstream.

The two-bnur autopsy was performed by Dr. Leopoido Basile and was witnessed by Italian judicial officials, including magistrate Ar-mando Spataro, who is leading an inquiry into the accident in which

Peterson was fatally injured. Spataro said that the autopsy wed no sign that Peterson had inhaled smoke or other lethal gases during the fiery crash. The First Shot Is Fired in Laser Sports Measurement

By David Bodanis

BERLIN (IHT) - Coroebus of Elis, a cook, won the footrace at the first Olympic Games in 776 B.C. His time was not recorded; a laurel from the gods celebrating the glory of his native land sufficed. Athletes today win glory for their native land, true, but they are also timed and compared, fixed and recorded - all to a fraction of a meter and a second. A far cry from 776 B.C., a far cry even from 1970 A.D.

What could be simpler than tossing a shot? Lots. The first shotput measuring without tape came in 1976, at Montreal: the judge spiked a prism-topped rod in the ground where the shot landed, and three laser beams zeroing in on the prism and a computer for the triangula-tion did the rest. No sagging tape to be marked by an official's uncertainly broad thumb.

The next step, being studied for the Moscow Olympics in 1980, is to measure automatically where the shot lands. Although radar and implanted pressure sensors are being considered; the most promising ap-proach is "walls" of photoelectric beams, to be spaced every few mil-limeters. The last wall completely passed by the shot is the distance thrown

(This technology was actually decode, signal code, and know what few years, are provided by computer manufacturers, they will be oblivious to bad-tempered arguments.) touchpad was automatically compared with the time the freestyler left the block. To modify this for Other field events are naturals for the re-entry spotter. A long jump is still measured from the end nf a jumping board to the skid where the jumper lands. This made sense when a tape had to be pulled out and one end attached to a fixed spot, but those days are now gone. New techniques often spread this way: proven in one field, they can used in others. Faster sprint starts may use the bead-up instru-ment readings that were designed for projecting light displays onto the windshields of F-15 fighter planes. Cycles of lights, pulsing down in hundredths of a second and projected before the runner in his crouch, could get him into the rhythm of the race's start, minimizing his delay at the gun. Swimming too bas its offerings.

For example, the 4x100 relay starts at the world swimming championships in Berlin last month were cheeked electronically. The time that the butterfly man hit the track would be easy: by entering the pass area the runner activates a light in front of his teammate next to go. Then batons could rest comfortably in historical displays, no longer to be frantically grasped and more frantically dropped. But not all possibilities, and not even all clear improvements, get taken. Take track, where sprints are still officially measured by hand. Error and Bias

Human judging leads to buman fudging: it's always liable tn error. if not bias. Whenever hand-beld and electronic timings are used at the same run the hand-held results are always much faster than the electronic. The problem comes at the start: Even if the starting gun's report is transmitted at the speed of light to the official standing by the finish line he still does not know when it will occur. Muhammed Ali in his prime could manage to hit a switch only some 120 milliseconds after a light flashed; nobody's conscious responses are faster than that. For a middle-aged official this delay is eloser to 180 milliseconds, or almost ,2 second. Track authorities haven't changed to electronic because this .2 second differential would disappear in such a change, a disappear-cords from before the change incomparable with those after it. There is a precedent for such a change: the switch from sprint starts out of holes to starts from blocks, was accepted in the early 1930s despite the general bettering of records that ensued. This sancti-ty of records was also why baseball watched itself wither away for several years in the late 1960s before it so much as lowered the pitcher's mound a few inches. It was the much-faster turnover among swimmers, and correspondingly reduced vested interests in old records, that allowed swimming to go electronic in the early 1960s.

Digging Begins On Herod Castle

AMMAN, Sept. 13 (UPI) - Archacologists have begun excavations at the castle where Salome danced for King Herod and then demanded the head of St. John the Baptist on a silver platter.

According to Adnan Hadidi, the director-general of Jordan's Department of Antiquities, the aim of the dig will be to unearth the foundations of Herod the Tetrarch's Machaerus Castle, The site of the castle is about 30 miles southeast of Amman. It is already a tourist attraction, not only for its bihlical connections but for its commanding view to the west of Jerusalem and the Dead Sea from the heights of what used to be conserve our oil and gas supplies."

"The consumer is safe," the general said. "He may have to pay more for gas and oil if the bill is saved, but you can't fight a moral war without some civilians getting hurt. The strategy of the commander-in-chief is to win the hearts of the people so we can have free elec-tions in 1980."

"What about conservation? Your forces seem to have lost that "We haven't lost the battle. We've just changed our tactics. In-stead of charging up the Hill, we have the enemy surrounded. It's only a matter of time before the energy forces that have been fighting us will wave the white

They seem to have won everything they wanted. Even if they sued for peace tomorrow what will your side have gained?

The general said hitterly, "The media keep saying we're losing. But there is more at stake here than wbether we win or lose a few skirmshes. Do you realize that if we don't save the energy bill the entire prestige of the United States will go down the drain? The dollar will be attacked and the national will of Americans to fight for energy will be in doubt. An aide put several more dollar signs on the map.

"What's he doing?" I asked the general.

We have to put more bucks into the line," the general said. "Our original estimates of what this war would cost every American were much lower than we thought." "Why don't you people just quit and start all over again?"

"Because," said the geoeral tart-"the commander-in-chief doesn't want to go down in history as the first president who lost a moral equivalent of war."

Gardner: Washington's Inside Outsider

By Henry Allen

WASHINGTON (WP) John Gardner, at 65, is the ideal public man. His face has set io the American mind like the plaster of Paris for a pantheon bust, his reputatioo is sullied by none of the roguery that finally passes for charm in a lot of politicians.

Amid plaques and busts and cartoons from his years as head of the Carnegie Foundation, the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, the Urban Coalition and Common Cause. John Gardner has his feet on his

He is modest - one bole in the left shoe, two in the right. A touch vain — he has stretched hair across a long run of wide, hald head. And worried - brow lines cluster eccentrically over an eyebrow.

He is worried about everything, it seems.

His new book, a neo-Emersostands solemnly above "the grim world around us," warning that "the worst is yet to come" and saying that "with luck this could be a time of rehirth." This last would seem to imply that all our conscious efforts will not be евоидь. Gloomy stuff indeed.

Forunately, Gardner doesn't frighten the reader further hy getting specific.
The "crypto-Utopians," for instance. Gardner is very down on their "bitterness and defeatism." Who are they? "I wouldn't want to try to nail someone to the mat as a specimen," he says.

"If you lonk at my record," he adds, "you'll see a lot more energy and willingness to take risks than is evident when you sit across the desk from me. There's no doubt that I have seemed to many people who've interviewed me to be rather bland." The more you listen to Gardner, the more you wonder how he's won his niche as white knight without portfolio, Elliot Richardson's sole rival in reassuring us that decent, handsome men can survive the corrosions of Washington.

"It's just possible," he says, "that you fare hetter in this town if you have a bit of the outsider in you. This town envelops you, it tries to capture you."

Gardner was bred for his role of insider's outsider — one of the more romantic roles the up-per classes have to offer. He had an intellectual and sophisticated mother who raised him on books and world travel when they weren't at home in the then-rural village of Beverly Hills, Calif. (his British father had died when he was a year old).

he was a year old).

He dropped out of high school to tour "what we called the Orient, hack then," with his maternal grandparents. He dropped out of Stanford to write "the great American novel," which he didn't. He swam a championship freestyle on the swimming team, and sbunned fraternioes. "I'm not an immensely gregarious type, and that's putting it mildly."

After getting his PhD in psychology, with a dissertation called "Levels of Aspiration," Gardner headed east to teach at Connecticut College for Women and Mt. Holyoke. Having married a Guatemalan woman, when World War II broke out, be came to Washington in an intelligence post, monitoring Spanish-language radio broad-

He ended up getting a com-mission in the Marine Corps — "I've always liked small, highmorale organizations" — and a post in Europe with the OSS, precursor of the CIA, and funnel for so many bright, well-bred young men who otherwise might have ended up bored and vestigi-

"There wasn't that much glamour to it," he says, confounding three decades of espionage legend. "It was a lot of work. Very interesting, but very frustrating sometimes."

Anyhow, an OSS superior's recommendation got him ioto the philanthropy business with the Carnegie Corp. in 1946. By the mid-50s, he was its president, a job that gave him impeccable credentials.

In 1965, Lyndon Johnson made him both his secretary at HEW and his token Republican. Gardner left in 1968, reportedly in conflict with Vietnam policy. but retained Johnson's favor as head of the Urban Coalition. Frustrated with the system.

Gardner startled Washingtoo by founding what seemed to be a pin-striped protest group, a lob-by for upper-middle-class liber-als — Common Cause. The jury will always be out on the effect Common Cause had on all the policies it tried to shape. But it is given credit as a major force be-hiod reform of the House seniority system, the opening of con-gressional bill-drafting sessions and the full disclosure of campaign contribucions.

Along the way, Gardner has written six books with titles like "Excellence" and "Self-Renewal" and "The Recovery of Confidence." All have been praised for their thoughtfulness and hlamed for being "sermonizing" or "vague."

"You can't be anchored to any absolute. You're just in there trying. I've been in a lot of ing for what they want, striving

For no definable reason? "That's right," Gardner says, without pause.

Is he an existentialist, then? 'I should say that along with man's problem-solving desires is a need for meaning, too." What meaning?

For Gardoer himself, the main touchstone, ever since his "Levels of Aspiración" dissertation days. has been "the worth and dignity of the person," he says. "I've been concerned with the fulfilment of potentiality, with renewal, and with morale." This is as specific as he will get. And his books are equally general.

"It's very easy to sit down and say what your values are." Gardner says, "but I wanted to reach a very hroad readership."

Surely, though, there have to be good and bad values in the world.

"Absolutely;" Gardner says. How do you tell the differ-

"That's a good question for a philosopher or an anthropologist," he says.

"When you get into the world of action, you find that people have to act day in, day out with-out conclusive proof of the right-ness of their actions." His actions these days are still considerable. "I'm involved in a dozen projects now that the book is finished," be says. "I consult with Common Cause, the United Way and Aspen Institute. I do a lot of speaking. I'm chairman of the President's Commission on White House Fellows. I'm on the board of Stanford."

He rises from his desk and ducks over to a cahinet. He pulls out a book titled "Know or Listen to Those Who Know," a collection of aphorisms he compiled with Francesca, one of his two daughters. He tosses it on the desk, with the only big grin of the last hour.

"You're gonna enjoy that book," he says. "It's the only di-verting book I ever had anything

One of the aphorisms, from Samuel Johnson, reads: "He was so generally civil that nobody thanked him for it." PEOPLE: Injury Bars Campaigning
By Elizabeth Taylor

No one seems to know where the tiny metallic fragment came from but it wound up in Elizabeth Taylor's eye, knocking her out of her husband's U.S. Senate campaign. While Miss Taylor and husband John Warner were catiog pizza in a Richmond, Va., restaurant, she felt pain "like lightning going through my eye," she said. The fragment was removed at Medical College of Virginia, and a family spokesman said that she is under a doctor's care, leaving Warner to campaign alone.

Giambattista Meneghini, former busband of the late opera singer Maria Callas, plans to open a muse-um dedicated to the soprano in the Italian village of Sirmione, on Lake Garda. Meneghini, 83, said he had intended to donate her belongings to Verona, where "she spent some of the happiest days of her life. But ... on the day she died not one moment was dedicated to her in any of Verona's many cultural events." A restored villa where the Meneghini's once lived will display all the objects that belonged to them from their marriage in 1946 until 1960, when Miss Callas left her husband for Greek shipping tycoon Aristotle Onassis. She died last year at 54.
